The island's various biotopes provide interesting starting points for discussions on a wide range of environmental topics. Aside from the study of animal and plant biodiversity, as well as marine ecology, St. John's Island has unique geological features and an interesting history, which have inspired many research institutes.

Our activities were also inspired and designed with a low environmental impact and to achieve a green outcome in an authentic and enjoyable way.

Our activities are supervised throughout by our trained professionals and a full safety briefing is given before your activity begins.

THE STORY SO FAR....

Your team of adventurers has been sent on a mission to excavate an ancient island city in Southern Island and recover a legendary totem that's rumored to be new power source.

Moments before arriving at your destination, an unexpected storm shipwrecked your ship and you are washed ashore. Now stranded in the vast island and exposed to an unrelenting storm, your only hope for survival is to quickly excavate the island, find the parts to a radio and rebuild it to call for help. If, however, any of your team expires from thirst and hunger or the storm gets too intense, your whole team loses and you become permanent artifacts of the Southern Island.

Are you ready to go exploring? Each team will have to work together to decode secret messages hidden around the island and go through a series of physical activities, where they will be challenged on their communication and teamwork skills. The team that completes the challenge with the fastest average time wins!

THE DISCOVERY OF GOLD

Traders and seafarers spoke long ago of a mythical island in the southern seas of Singapore where fields of wheat grew beneath the auspices of great mountains. Forests, too, grew near the clay-rich hills. Gold! The shout was heard across Singapore. Gold had been discovered on the Southern Islands! Groups of enterprising settlers finally decided to settle the island hoping the recent finds would help them succeed. Your team of settlers has just arrived on the island and must now race against time and other settlers to learn how to mine for gold and build settlements, hoping to succeed where the former settlers did not.

Outdoors, competitive, high energy, strategic, creative, communication. It's fast, it's furious, it's fun! In this race against the clock, teams will need to use their thinking skills to set the strategy, solve the clues and get as many questions answered as possible. Be ready to take some creative and beautiful pictures.

The more clues you can solve, the more chance you have of winning!
